

If you are caring for a loved one with cancer, this benefit is for you

Supporting a loved one through cancer can be emotional, confusing, and exhausting, and Color is here to support you, too. Here's how Color can help:

Understand their diagnosis and medical communications:

Our clinicians can help you understand your loved one's diagnosis and treatment options, and support you in preparing questions for their care team or seeking second opinions.

Get help with managing appointments and scheduling:

Color's care advocates take on logistical details like scheduling appointments, coordinating between providers, and helping you navigate financial or insurance-related concerns.

Care for yourself while you care for others:

We connect you to peer-led support groups designed specifically for those caring for loved ones, where you can build community and learn evidence-based strategies for managing stress, burnout, and emotional fatigue.
